Border Arriate is a jack-in-the-box; a surprise package in a plain wrapper. Enter it from any direction, and it appears to be a sleepy rural village waiting, with no sense of urgency, for its grass to grow and its paint to dry. Then, abracadabra! - a corner is turned and the visitor is suddenly thrown into the sophisticated high street of a chic and bustling small town, full of high-class stores selling quality goods, and crowds who have obviously enough money to buy them. With an area of only 9 square kilometers, Arriate is the smallest municipal district in the province of Malaga, surrounded on all sides by land belonging to one of the largest - Ronda. Until 1630, it was part of the Round itself, but in that year the people got together, had a whip-round, and raised enough money to buy their freedom.
